This week's Torah reading: Re'eh
Annual (Deut. 11:26-16:17): Etz Hayim p. 1061
Triennial (Deut. 15:1-16:17): Etz Hayim p. 1076
Haftarah (Isaiah 54:11-55:5): Etz Hayim p. 1085

Musings on Re'eh -- "See I place before you all today blessings and curses - the blessings, if you listen to the commandments... and the curses, if you don't listen to the commandments...." (Devarim 11:26-28)

The title of this parasha, Re'eh, is the command word "see" in the singular. Two Shabbats prior, the people were commanded to "hear" (Shema). What is the difference between the way we learn with our eyes and the way we learn with our ears? The sages say in Talmud Bavli Tractate Rosh Ha Shana, "hearing is not comparable to seeing."

Why does the Torah sometimes command us to look and other times to listen? What does Rabbi Israel Salanter, founder of the mussar (ethics) movement of Judaism, mean when he writes, "the distance between the mind and the heart is greater than the distance between the sun and the earth?" Which affects us more: An event that we heard about or an event that we witnessed? When we learn something in our minds, it is useless to us until we can move it into our hearts and act on it.

What exactly are we meant to see? And according to the verses here, it actually all depends on listening. So do we need our eyes or our ears? Perhaps we need our hearts.

The key here, I think, is the word "today". Every single day there are all sorts of circumstances in front of us. It depends how we look at them if we see them as blessings or curses. Either way, our belief is that everything comes from God. It's only our interpretation, the way we listen, that dictates whether the experience good or bad. Every single day, indeed every single moment, we can choose how we view things.

So seeing is about whatever is in front of us. Listening is about what goes inside of us. Allowing God's Word in, that's what allows us to view the circumstances before us as blessings. It is so crucial to be open - open-hearted and open-minded - to the Divine. It is the access to a blessed life.

May we always place God before ourselves, seeing God in all that comes our way. May we accept all that is in front of us as Divine. May we all be open to God's blessings. And may those blessings be infinite.

Think about this

God's blessing alone can make you rich;
so in your stinginess, think about this:

One man gives and always has more,
while the miser withholds and ends up poor.

(Translation from "The Dream of the Poem" Hebrew Poetry from Muslim and Christian Spain 950 - 1492 by Peter Cole)

But right at the beginning of the parshah Moses places a dramatic choice before bnei Yisrael (children of Israel): "Re'eh anochi noten lifneichem hayom brachah uklalah. Re'eh"– "See, this day I set before you blessing and curse: blessing, if you obey the commandments ... and curse, if you do not obey the commandments." (11:26-30)

So our parshah offers the Israelites a choice – follow the mitzvot (commandments) and get blessed or don't and get cursed. That doesn't sound like a great choice, does it? Not exactly what you would call freedom and individual autonomy. But let's have a closer look at the passuk (verse):

"Re'eh anochi noten lifneichem hayom brachah uklalah." If you write this sentence in a Hebrew ulpan, your Hebrew teacher would (hopefully) gently point out that the sentence begins in the singular (re'eh - see) and continues in the plural (lifneichem) – I am setting before "you all" (plural) blessing and curse.

Nearly a thousand years ago, Ibn Ezra (12th Century) commented on this "mistake" that the verse "addresses each individual Jew". 600 years later, his brief observation is picked up by the Vilna Gaon (18th Century) when he taught, "Should a person say to himself: As everyone else is wicked, why should I be any better?" he is told, "See! Do what is proper and ignore what everyone else does."

The decisions we take as individuals have impact far beyond the circle of our lives. We have seen in the last three hundred years how the unchecked rape and abuse of the planet's resources have left us with a world that now hangs precariously in the balance. Will it sustain life for a few more generations, or will we find that we have pushed this world just too far? Blessing or curse? What do we choose?

Everything that we decide to consume is a choice of blessing or curse. Will we continue to purchase over-packaged non-foods that contain more chemicals than recognisable ingredients, the latter of which were harvested using unsustainable farming methods by underpaid workers and then shipped across the globe to shave a few cents off the cost? Or will we create communities that support locally grown produce, live humbler, simpler lives connected to the land that sustains us and ensuring that the generations to come choose blessing over curse?

As it states later in the parshah when talking about kashrut, "for you are a people holy to the Eternal your God". Let us make choices that are holy and that bring blessing to ourselves, our communities and the world we live in.

FYI -- Catherine Silver and Joyce Silver are having an art exhibition at the Depot Gallery in Montauk, August 13th – August 23rd.

Quote of the Week

I was standing on the highest mountain of them all, and round about beneath me was the whole hoop of the world. And while I stood there I saw more than I can tell and I understood more than I saw; for I was seeing in a sacred manner the shapes of all things in the spirit, and the shape of all shapes as they must live together like one being. And I saw that the sacred hoop of my people was one of many hoops that made one circle, wide as daylight and as starlight, and in the center grew one mighty flowering tree to shelter all children of one mother and one father. And I saw that it was holy. Black Elk's Vision

May Elul bring you satisfying self-reflection and repair of your relationships, may you find forgiveness for anything that troubles you, and may we all choose blessing and life together as a community.

Shabbat shalom.
